That said the premise is a beautiful one and one I have seen used before the events linked to physically item so if you are looking at a period drama linked to a ghost story then for the 50s I think this story works. I love Helen Dunmore's sense of time and place in all her novels, and her character effectively captures the haunting feeling of the story but my sense was that we see rather too much of the workings of the story rather than getting a sense that the story develops organically.
