I develop this argument more fully in the next essay, but here want to touch on the fundamental differences between reading the text as a letter and reading the same text recast by Las Casas as the prologue to the Diario. And yet the letter contains blatant "errors" concerning the time and place of key historical events mentioned in the text.

Archivo:FlagofCoahuilayTejas. Its anomalous relation to the diario of the first navigation is especially pointed: the letter suppresses mention of the commercial dimension of the voyage even as entry after entry throughout the day-by-day account relates the obsessive search for gold and spices. Padilla was granted an extra forty pesos per year for writing the chanzonetas, as the chapter continued to call them, with the stipulation that he would hand over the pieces each year so that they could be archived. Tellingly, the artifice and variety of the madrigal are to be avoided in the chanzoneta. TorrenteAldershot:AshgatePublishingLimited,However, general atmosphere and meaning has been preserved.
