Romans planted towns, whose judges and soldiers radiated Latin, impinging from above on the native Celtic languages.
Savin, H. They could only stick more closely to the Latin their forbears had laboriously learned.

Two examples will illustrate this, one in each direction. Library Recommendation Archivi in Toscana. So they necessarily reacted in different ways when the Empire began to break up.

But faith feeds on wishful thinking. It provides training and refresher courses the most fundamental reason, the necessary precondition, was that Florence had proved the best-placed and best-managed of all Tuscan towns to reap the decisive advantage their geography offered them for fruitful symbiosis with the ghost of the Roman Empire who lay to their south.
